PINNED- DOWN

Eddie Fowler edged his back against the edge of the rock crevice and looked down upon the mucky Korean field below. The lone G.I. was still there—squirming like a swamp rat in the mud of the narrow rivulet that was his only protection from sudden death. The chatter of the machine gun had let up for a moment, but its mark of murder could be seen in the dozens of mud splatters about the soldier. The bullets had come dangerously close, nearly finding their helpless target a half dozen times.

Eddie looked up at the overcast settling in from the north. A clever guy with a couple a tons of luck might somehow slip around in the growing dusk and chop that machine gun nest up. But the chances were one in a hundred and only a sap would take them—particularly when the pay-off was saving the life of his bitter enemy. The machine gun started to cough again and Eddie watched, fascinated by the puffs of mud kicking up in a semi-circle around the rigid man. He lowered his head into cupped hands and lit a cigarette, drawing deeply.

It was a long haul from Boston, Mass., 1950, when the guy out there had belted him through a plush night club mirror and snapped off two teeth. Yeah, Rod Sessler was a tough guy with his mitts, all right. Tough with the women, too—tough enough to walk off with Eddie's best girl, and send him scurrying out of town to forget, like a sick school kid. Well, all that sentimental slosh was over, now. War had snatched them both up and made survival the top mental priority.

The dusk was closing in thicker, and Eddie stirred restlessly as the hammering of the machine gun ceased once again. It wasn't as if he were betraying a buddy in combat, he thought. Nobody figures you a heel if you don't throw your life away on a cockeyed gamble to save a guy. Besides, another few minutes and it'd be dark enough for Rod to make a break out on his own. Sure, that was the answer—unless, of course, he was wounded and couldn't crawl out of the trap to safety.

Darkness closed in fast. Eddie lighted another cigarette. Maybe he was wrong. Enemies or not, maybe he should get out there and give this fellow soldier a helping hand. He started up from his rock "foxhole", then slid back. The machine gun had started again, this time in hard, short bursts. The shrewd North Koreans must have pin-pointed Rod's position before dark. They were hammering it at intervals now, probably peppering just behind the soldier, on the route he would have to crawl to reach safety.

Just plain suicide to go out there now. He settled back in the safety of his rock protection. Better chance waiting till it's good and dark...they can't shoot at somethin' they can't see!

Several hours passed. The battlefield was a blanket of darkness. It had been quiet earlier in the evening but now the enemy machine gun had come alive again. As tracer bullets stabbed through the night Eddie heard a voice. He shifted uneasily to another sitting position as the voice kept repeating his name. It was Rod all right—seeking help. Eddie covered his ears to cut off the sound and chewed his lower lip nervously. Can't go just yet, he told himself. Suddenly, the sky above him lit up. There was the familiar blast of an M-1 semi-automatic—then another and another followed by a terrifying scream of a man in agony. Eddie lunged for the rifle at his side. But before he could reach it something crashed down upon him, pinning him to the ground. It was a North Korean soldier—dead!

Eddie looked up and saw Rod Sessler's blood-streaked, grinning face in a shaft of moonlight striking the ledge. Rod slumped down against the ledge, dog-tired, his rifle falling free.

"Ya gotta be careful, Eddie," he said. "Those gooks saw ya light a cigarette—good thing I got out of that spot when I did!"

"Yeah," said Eddie. "Thanks a lot—buddy!"

AND HEADING TRUE! LET'S GET OUT OF HERE!

TWO RIGHT ON THE NOSE, STEVE!

GOOD! WE CAN GO HOME NOW!

RIOT on KOJE!

Sergeant Rod Gilligan looked at the seething, screaming mob of enemy prisoners-of-war. The North Koreans and the Chinese Reds shouted curses and imprecations at the English and American troops outside the compound.

"If one of our boys in a Commy camp behaved like that you can bet they'd shoot him without thinkin' twice about it!" he grumbled.

Tex Kramer, his red-haired sidekick, grinned at him tolerantly. "That's the difference between a democracy and a totalitarian outfit, Rod," Tex said. "In the long run, our way can't help but be best."

"I'm not thinkin' of the long run," Rod said gloomily. "I'm thinkin' of right now! There, look at that!" From behind their huts came prisoners bearing huge cloth signs stating to the world at large that the Communist prisoners were rioting only because living conditions behind the barbed wire of the American compounds were so unbearable and inhumane. The thousands of prisoners milling close to the fence greeted the signs with a new roar of noise. The more foolhardy and exuberant ones picked up the stones at their feet and started to pelt them at the U.N. troops; a rock the size of a golf ball rattled off of Tex's helmet.

"Let's go in there and calm those monkeys down!" he shouted in exasperation. A major who was standing nearby looked at Tex and smiled quietly. "You may get your chance sooner than you think!" He turned to Gilligan. "Sergeant," he said, "Where would you enter the camp in order to risk as few American lives as possible while you quell the revolt?"

Rod answered without any hesitation. "I'd go through the middle of the wall, sir. They'll be expecting us to attack from the air and to rush the front and rear gates; but they won't expect us to go charging through the middle of some natural obstacle like a many-stranded fence of barbed wire."

The major looked at Gilligan keenly. "Better get ready," General," he said. "Your turn is coming very, very soon."

At five o'clock that night the U.N. forces sent a handful of picked men, led by Sgt. Gilligan, into the noisy, enemy-filled compound. A light tank broke the barbed wire in the middle of the fence, and behind the vehicle charged the U.S. infantry, complete with gas masks. At first the commies, surprised beyond measure by the suddenness of the U.N. move, turned and fled from the bayonets of the infantrymen. But then they realized the advantage of their sheer weight of numbers, and soon they came charging back, wielding long, deadly flails of barbed wire that could take half a man's face away with one blow.

At the first sign that the enemy resistance was becoming stubborn, Rod brought in the tear gas. At a signal from him twelve men dropped the cylinders and the gas went seeping lazily up from the ground. The tear gas stopped them where neither reason nor force had been able to. The gas-masked U.N. troops quickly mopped up the weeping, coughing mob of prisoners who, just a few short moments before, had been howling, complaining madmen.

Red dodged as a North Korean, eyes red and smarting from the gas, flailed at him with a barbed wire whip. Quickly he reversed his rifle and brought the butt down solidly on the enemy's arm. Yelping with pain, the North Korean joined his buddies.

Red looked at Gilligan and grinned. "About that conversation we had this morning, Rod," he said. "I've decided that democracy is definitely the best way—as long as it's a fighting democracy. And," he grinned at his buddy, "we sure are one, aren't we?"

says REX FERRUS—Undefeated, Unchallenged Champion

"ASHAMED OF BEING SKINNY?
Here's How to Do Something About It Like Rex Ferrus Did!" Says George F. Jowett, Known as World's Greatest Builder of HE-MEN.

Maybe you don't want to have crowds roaring your name—to be the idol of women and the envy of men everywhere—to win cups, medals, championship belts like Rex Ferrus has. But just think of how wonderful it would be to KNOW YOU CAN BE SUCH A CHAMPION
—to stop being skinny, puny, jeered at and bullied.
Picture yourself with Rex Ferrus' physique, muscles and HE-MAN power—the kind of power that forces bullies to FEAR YOU instead of SNEERING at You.
You CAN DO IT, just like Rex Ferrus did it, like I did it
—and like thousands of my pupils are doing EVERY DAY!

YES sir—I can tell you from my OWN EXPERI-ENCE and the experience of thousands of my pupils that you CAN DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT and you can DO IT FAST AND EASY!

NO! I don't care how skinny or flabby you are;
if you're teen-ager, in your 20's or 30's or over; if you're short or tall, or what work you do. All I want is JUST 10 EXCITING MINUTES in your home to MAKE YOU OVER by the SAME METHOD I turned myself from a wreck to a Champion of Champions.

MAKE ME PUT UP OR SHUT UP—I'LL BUILD YOU

Minutes a Day or IT WON'T COST YOU ONE CENT!
